Sadly, the marking centre will provide higher marks for demonstration of higher order thinking even when not asked for in the question.

Mouse-over the colored blocks to see examples of learning objectives that generally match each of the various combinations of the cognitive process and knowledge dimensions.

NOTE: These are learning *objectives—not learning *activities. It may be useful to think of preceding each objective with something like, "students will be able to . . ."

The best judgements are astute, considered, and are not cheerleaders.

Consider balance: is outsourcing ALWAYS good - or only if done for non core elements and only then if properly manage the risks?

Is Just in Time a great operational strategy for a retailer (ie WalMart), but a more limited strategy for a business like LEGO which stores 7 days inputs on site to manage the risk?

Is technology a great strategy to drive down risks in manufacturing and the supply chain, but must managers use it pragmatically and not always look to a technology solution - the the CEO talking about the whiteboard.

E

Max 2-3 sentences.
Not a textbook rewrite but an entry
to your ANALYSIS

P

Company intro, 1 sentence if at all. Maybe connect the judgement into sentence 1 with the name of the company.
Micro detail, program names, of what the strategy was and the issues etc

C

Micro detail on impact (ie cause and effect for the strategy outcome)
THEN
Must make that JUDGEMENT as to importance.

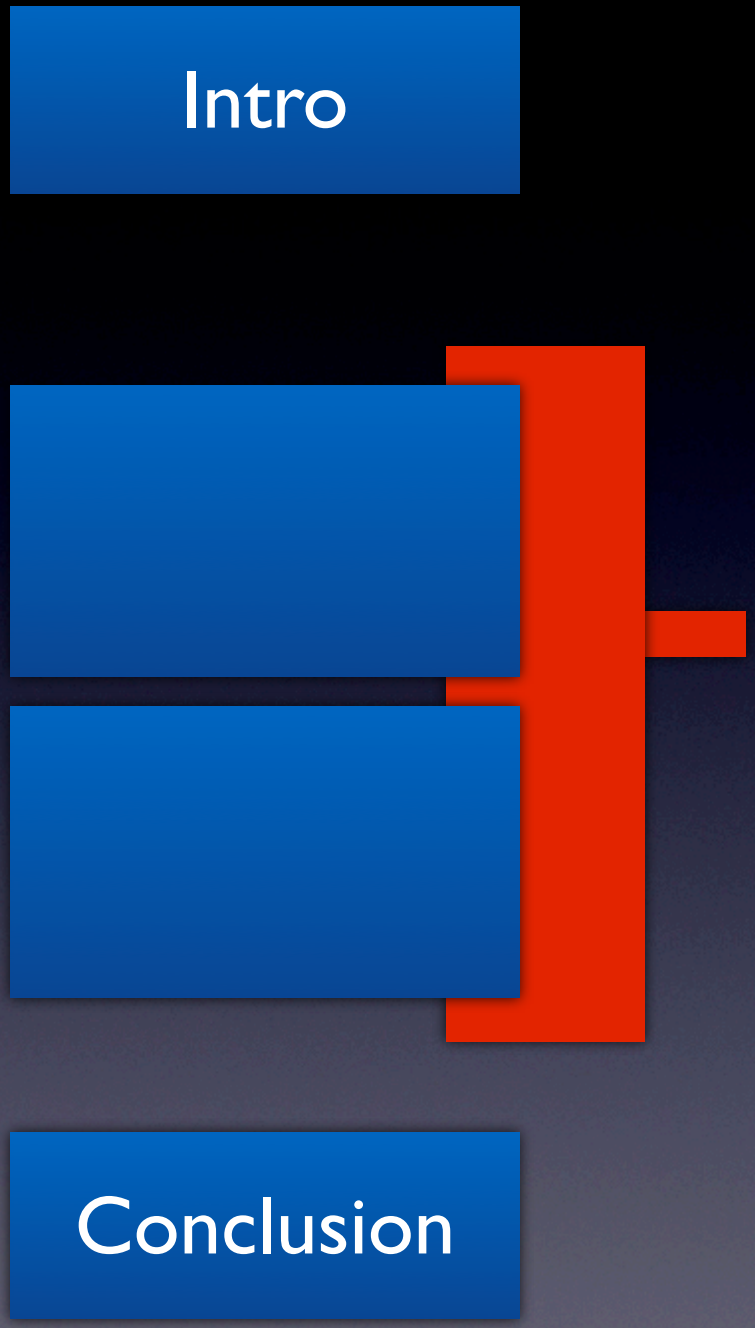

If you want 17+, rewarding good sentences and literacy sophistication in making your judgement.

The best essays use a couple of case studies that contrast, or refer to business names along the way in terms of industries.

Whilst Just in Time is a critical inventory management strategy for retailers like Woolworths, Walmart and Rebel to reduce inventory costs and obsolescence, LEGO chooses not to use JIT to manage resource inputs. Now tell me about LEGO.....

Write like an adult, assessing and demonstrating the importance of the strategies, rather than a student providing a description of a company.
